

AWU UPDATE COVID-19

20th April 2020

PROTECTING YOUR RIGHTS AT WORK

AWU members around Queensland and the Northern Territory have been putting in the hard yards to keep Queensland and the NT running during this incredibly challenging time.

Unfortunately, we've already heard far too many stories of employers using COVID-19 as an excuse to weaken terms and conditions of employment and rip workers off.

Using a global pandemic to target your workforce is nothing short of disgraceful.

If your employer tries to:

1. Vary your enterprise agreement
2. Change your roster or hours of work
3. Force you to use up your annual or long service leave
4. Do anything to cut back or change your terms and conditions of employment

Make sure you speak to your AWU Delegate or Organiser immediately.

Remember: any change to your terms and conditions at work can only happen if a majority of workers vote to approve it.

If your boss tries to change your conditions at work – speak to your workmates and vote no.

It's only by taking the time to vote no that you can save your conditions at work.

There's never been a more important time to be a member of the AWU.

AWU officials are working around the clock to make sure members are kept safe and treated fairly at work.

If you've got a safety issue at work or don't think that your boss is doing the right thing – contact the AWU today.
